

IPCC Working Group II Co-Chair Debra Roberts

The report calls up four big transitions that the board needs to go through in terms of energy, land, cities and industry.

That's a really empowering message - it means each one of us as individuals can make choices about the energy we use to move through our lives, about dietary choices that impact on land use, it tells us that we can change the way we interact with the world's cities, through the transport we chose to go to work and to play. It also talks to us that we have power as consumers, in terms of directing where industry goes and the kind of goods they manufacture.

So overall - a real call to action!